ABSTRACT

A circuit for calculating a discriminating function with successive iterations and with a work register on data divided into blocks, comprising: a single operator in wired logic for executing the function; a plurality of work registers sharing said operator; and 5   an element for selecting one of the work registers to be associated with the operator.